INTRODUCTION

The Directory of Licensed, Certified, and Registered Occupations in Arkansas is designed to provide students, job seekers, counselors, and other interested persons with information about occupational licenses or certificates issued by Arkansas state boards, commissions, and departments.

This directory is a source of readily accessible occupational licensing/certifying information for occupations in Arkansas, but it in no way replaces detailed information available from the various licensing and certifying boards and agencies. The information in this directory was taken from materials supplied by each of the boards and agencies. In most cases, the facts contained in this publication are the wordage of the occupational licensing or certifying authorities themselves. The publication is designed to provide readers with information on Arkansas regulated occupations and contains requirements found in Arkansas state statutes. Although some occupations contained in this directory reference business activity, the directory attempts to maintain a complete list of occupational licenses or certificates for individuals only. Licensing requirements issued by federal agencies or local municipalities are not included.

The directory includes a job title, O*Net Code, a brief job description, required examinations and fees, other requirements, and the name, address, telephone number, fax number (where available), web address (where available), and e-mail address (where available) of the licensing authority. Where available, the number of active or total licenses for each occupation is included.

O*Net is an occupational classification system that includes detailed analysis of occupational work duties, knowledge, skills, and activities. The Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) system is a coding system used by federal government agencies, and federal/state cooperative programs to classify workers into occupational categories for the purpose of collecting, calculating, or disseminating data. O*Net is based on the SOC system.

We extend our thanks to the various licensing/certifying agencies, boards and/or commissions for providing information and assistance in the revision of this handbook. We have attempted to make this information as accurate as possible, but it should be noted that the licensing/certifying procedures are subject to change due to revisions made by the various regulating authorities or by the Arkansas State Legislature. Users of this handbook are urged to advise the Division of Workforce Services, Occupational-Career Information Section of any errors or omissions.

For business license information, contact your local city or county government offices. For a listing of Business Resources, visit the State of Arkansas website at www.arkansas.gov.

Description

Doctors of Veterinary Medicine diagnose and treat numerous diseases and injuries in animals. Because much of their work is involved with commercial livestock, veterinarians play an important role in the nation's food production. They are also important to the overall public health program preventing the outbreak of animal diseases, many of which can be spread to humans. Veterinarians perform surgery on sick and injured animals, and also prescribe and administer drugs, medicines, serums, and vaccines. Most veterinarians are general practitioners who treat livestock, as well as pets. Those who live in large, metropolitan areas work almost exclusively on their client's pets, while those practicing in rural areas usually specialize in treating farm animals. Many veterinarians are employed in federal and state health programs, conducting inspections on meat, poultry, and other foods. Others are on the faculties of veterinary colleges or are engaged in various types of research.

Engineer Interns contribute greatly to the public safety, welfare, scientific progress, and defense of the nation. The results of their work have a profound effect on every phase of modern society. Engineers design industrial machinery, develop scientific equipment, supervise the construction of buildings and highways, and design consumer products and various other innovations that help people adjust to modern society. They evaluate the overall effectiveness of their new devices, as well as the cost and reliability. Although most engineers develop a specific expertise, all require a basic knowledge of common engineering methodology. The emphasis on application of scientific principles, rather than on their discovery, is the main distinguishing factor of an engineer's work from that of a scientist. The engineer's work is not limited to design and development and may include inspection, quality control, management and administration.
